Stand Together community donates 100 million Satoshis to criminal justice reform group – Taking Action for Good

ARLINGTON, VA | June 5, 2021 – Stand Together, a philanthropic community tackling some of the biggest challenges of our times, including reforming the nation’s criminal justice system, announced Saturday its very first cryptocurrency contribution, awarding 100 million Satoshis to criminal justice advocate Alice Johnson’s foundation, Taking Action for Good (TAG).

The announcement was made during Johnson’s appearance at Bitcoin 2021, a Miami conference described by organizers as “the biggest Bitcoin event in history with a sold-out crowd of 12,000 attendees.”

“Alice Johnson is making a difference and helping to improve the lives of deserving men and women,” said Stand Together’s Director of Criminal Justice Reform Brianna Nuhfer. “We hope that many others in the Bitcoin community will join us in supporting Alice and this important work.”

“The Bitcoin community has great potential to help drive desperately needed reforms that will ensure fairness, compassion, and rehabilitation for those who enter the justice system,” said Johnson.

Gideon Powell, a leader in the Bitcoin community and criminal justice advocate, called on conference participants to support Johnson’s efforts and to make cryptocurrency donations to her organization.

“Let’s build Alice a war chest to fund a multi-decade strategy to create a freer world,” said Powell.

Powell’s call to action was made with the backdrop of a QR code that provided attendees with a mechanism to make their contributions to TAG.
